Cost of war

Ted Taylor came home from Vietnam in June 1971 to visit his wife, Muriel, and their newborn son, Saddler. He was killed in action two months later.

Ted Taylor '68 had the best 10 days of his life in late June of 1971.

Taylor, a U.S. Army helicopter pilot serving in Vietnam, came home on leave to meet his son, Saddler Taylor '93, who was born the previous month. When the 10 days were up, he packed his bags and his memories and returned to the war.

A few weeks later, on July 15, 1971, Taylor was killed when the Cobra helicopter he was flying was shot down while he was on a reconnaissance mission.

If not for an unbreakable bond formed during his days at Wofford, that's where the story would end.

Pioneers return to campus

Gwendolyn Prince-Lawrence '73 and Janice Means '73 received applause multiple times while celebrating their 50th reunion during Commencement weekend. They were the first two Black women to graduate from Wofford College.

Janice Means and Gwendolyn Prince-Lawrence were the first two Black women to graduate from Wofford College, and they recently returned to campus to celebrate their 50th reunion.

They were among the members of the Class of 1973 who celebrated their gold reunion during Commencement weekend.

“I never set out to be a history maker,” Means says. “I was focused on one thing – getting my degree to prepare for my goal to have a management and decision-making position in corporate America.”

Vasily Velit retires

Vasily Velit tested the chair that the college's retirees receive during a recent reception.

Vasily Velit retired from the college on May 15 after serving 10 years as a housekeeper.

“We’re missing Vasily already, especially during this busy time of the year,” says Jeff Burney, director of housekeeping and event services. “He was always on top of things. If something was missed, he’d let us know. During our breaks, we would discuss our after-work plans, and he liked to talk about what he had growing in his garden while sipping green tea and ginger, his cure for any sickness.”

Spring 2023 Dean's List

Wofford College announces the spring 2023 Dean's List.

Dr. Timothy Schmitz, provost of Wofford College, has announced Dean's List students for the spring 2023 semester. Students achieving a 3.60 grade-point average or higher after earning at least 12 academic hours qualify for the Dean's List.
