in Sparta, Ga., Jan., 1807. Here he brought forward a resolution, "that if any preacher should desert his station through fear, in time of sickness or danger, the Conference should never employ that man again." He spake to the case with amazing argument and energy, and carried his cause like a dying general in victory.

George Dougharty began to travel in Santee, 1778; Oconee, 1779; Charleston, 1800 and 1801; Sceleulda district, 1802, 1803, and 1804; Camden district, 1805 and 1806: supernannted and died in 1807. He departed this life in Wilmington, N. C., March 23, 1807. He was buried in the African church, by the side of William Meredith, the founder of that church, and the person who formed that society.

From a witness of his death.

"Our worthy brother, George Dougharty, left Charleston with Captain Bingley, who was to sail from this place to the West Indies. On their arrival they found that the ship would not be ready to go to sea for several days. Brother Dougharty stayed with us. His friendly captain visited him, and kindly offered to give him his passage, and to do every thing in his power to render the intended voyage profitable and agreeable. But it was evident that his complaint had too far progressed to attempt to move him to the vessel. We, therefore, advised, and it was also his opinion, that it would be best for him to wait longer. He stayed with us about five weeks. His sufferings were great—too great to be described. He conversed but little, and scarcely said anything of himself; and yet there was an engaging expressiveness in his looks, actions, and sufferings, even until death, such as I have scarcely, if ever, seen.

"When he spake of Deity, of providence, or of religion—reverence, gratitude, solemnity, joy, &c., were evidently all alive in his soul. He spake what he knew, and his knowledge of God, his Redeemer and Saviour, inspired his heart and exalted his soul with a confidence which was neither shaken by the pressure of his afflictions, nor the ravages of death.

"Of his submission and resignation too much could not easily be said. He appeared to be jealous of his own will, and to embrace the will of the Lord, not only without murmuring, but with pleasure, yea, with joy.

"Great also was his patience. I saw nothing like impatience in all his sufferings. The perfect work of patience was so manifest in him, that he appeared to be at ease, while his sufferings from various causes (as we well knew) were dreadfully severe. I do not recollect to have observed the least appearance of uneasiness on his mind, except a fear of being troublesome; when he, in the most grateful and loving manner, said, 'I fear I shall be too troublesome to you.'

"Of his fortitude I would speak at large; but although I saw it, I cannot describe it. He spake of death and eternity with an engaging, feeling, sweet assurance, and manifested an indescribable assemblage of confidence, love, and hope, while he said, 'The goodness and love of God to me are great and marvellous, as I go down the dreadful declivity of death.' His understanding was unimpaired in death, and so perfect was his tranquillity, that his true greatness was probably never seen or known until that trying period. He died without a struggle, or scarcely a sigh.

"Wilmington, N. C., Dec., 1807."

JOSHUA WILLS.

2. BENNET KENDRICK. — What pen can write his worth! A native of Virginia, born in Mecklenburg county, on the south side of Roanoke. He departed this life on April 5, 1807, at Edward Crossland's near Marlborough court house, between the Chawraw hills and Long Bluff, on Great Pee Dee River, S. C., with three weeks' illness—a nervous remittent fever. He was devoted to God in his sickness and confidence and comfort abundant in his death. But young in years, yet he possessed great gravity, and filled the important stations of Wilmington, Charleston, and Columbia in which he had to keep the charge of the societies, dwelling houses, and the church buildings. Economy was the smallest part of his excellence. His upright walking, his faithfully dispensing the word of life both at home and abroad, he manifested with a confidence which was neither shaken by the pressure of his afflictions, nor the ravages of death.

"Of his submission and resignation too much could not easily be said. He appeared to be jealous of his own will, and to embrace the will of the Lord, not only without murmuring, but with pleasure, yea, with joy.

and tender husband. As a friend, he was firm and constant, open, free, and familiar; much given to hospitality. His house was always open to strangers, the people of God, and especially the ministers of the gospel.

He was a native of Virginia; born in Brunswick county, and died at Pipe Creek, Frederick county, Maryland. Not many such cases as Henry Willia's have been known; he lingered along the shores of death, apparently dying, and then reviving and reviving for near five years, in which time his labours were measurably, and sometimes altogether cut off from the church.

We do not recollect that there ever was any charge brought against him in the Conference, where the character of all the travelling preachers are annually examined. The different stations he filled in some degree show the extent of his ministerial labours. One part of his Christian life was spent in doing, and the other in suffering, the will of God.

He had his usefulness in the ministry, and deserved highly of his brethren. He travelled in the extreme parts of the west, before things were made ready to his hands, and was a part of the burden and benefit of the day.

We trust that he was made perfect through suffering, and triumphant in death. And possibly, it required more faith and fortitude to wear out the confirmed affliction, and state of dependence, than to go through the most extreme labour and sufferings in the field of action. It must be exceedingly painful for a person accustomed to extensive travelling to be bound and fettered by affliction as a prisoner of Divine Providence; and in a great degree cut off from the services of God, his worship, and all Christian fellowship; not only as a minister, but as a member of society. Thus some souls are tried in the furnace of affliction. Deep calls unto deep! The raging bilows go over them; but they will soon reach the peaceful shore, gain their haven, the rest of the weary and afflicted, the peace of angels and God. Where, with new powers, they will see the rising glory, and sing for ever the praise of Jesus their Lord!
