Charles Carroll of Carrollton writes about Flour prices, his Daughter and her Illness, and the Weather, 1829

Charles Carroll
30th June 1829

Dear Sir,

In my last letter including my notes, you and my powers of attending to same. Next week I desired you to apply to Beatty to know how many barrels of my flour unsold and the present price of flour.

Mr. Parkeet has been dangerously ill owing to an inflammation of her bowels, the doctor was sent for and he bled her copiously which has saved her life. She is now on a fair way of recovery. There has been one holiday since I came to the Manor, which brought the guests, this weather is favourable to the wheat harvest, but unfavourable to the corn.

Your affectionately,

Ch. Carroll of Carrallton
